From the Editor

Keeping current is an adventure — it takes creativity and innovation; and a commitment to being a life long learner. Reading a journal like WORK can assist in this journey. The ideas put forth by this issue's authors provide a snapshot of some of the areas of work practice. Articles include clinical application, as well as research and commentary; and range from topics such as a positive work environment to a novel approach to injury prevention to time mastery and body mechanics to falls among nurses.

For those readers interested in the ongoing discussion of the job functions of rehabilitation ergonomists, I direct your attention to the article, entitled, Rehabilitation Ergonomists: Standards for Development authored by Isernhagen, Hart, & Matheson for an update.

As always, I welcome hearing from you.
