

FROM THE EDITOR

The theme of this issue is The Elbow and Its Treatment. Robert P. Wilder, MD, and Robert P. Nirschl, MD, MS, the guest editors for this issue, have selected an outstanding group of authors from across the country. They have worked very diligently to create and produce an outstanding issue. We thank them for that.

In addition to the thematic manuscripts, we have included an article by Elliott and Foley titled Neurologic Pain Syndromes in Cancer Patients. This is an excellent diagnostic review. In another contribution, Walker and the staff of the Division of Rehabilitation Research and Training Center of the Department of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation at Virginia Commonwealth University offer two case studies on supported employment for people with low back pain.

Ernie Johnson, MD, in his standard editorial style, shares his opinions on treatment of tennis elbow. We also thank Karen Drilling, PT, for reviewing the latest text by Saunders and Saunders.

We hope you find this issue interesting and helpful. If you have any needs, concerns, or ideas for future issues, please communicate these to us.

Karen S. Rucker, MD
