

From the Editor

---

“There are countless ways of achieving greatness, but any road to achieving one’s maximum potential must be built on a bedrock of respect for the individual, a commitment to excellence, and a rejection of mediocrity.”

-Buck Rogers

I believe that the current challenges we all face in the health care environment will force us to reexamine the value of our services, reevaluate the direction of each of our own practices and that of our profession’s, and help to identify and create new opportunities to apply our skills. As Horace wrote, “Adversity has the effect of eliciting talents, which in prosperous circumstances would have lain dormant.”

It is my hope, that each of the articles contained in this issue of WORK will assist in helping you to “elicit talents” from which to use in your practice.

As always, I welcome your comments.

Karen
kjacobs@bu.edu