

From the Editor

I remember vividly when I first met Dr. Krishna Asundi. It was at a presentation that I was giving at Harvard University's School of Public Health. I was so impressed with the work he was doing and the questions that he asked during my presentation that I invited him to be the guest editor of a special issue of WORK. He immediately accepted this leadership role and I am delighted with the outcome of his efforts - this special issue of WORK devoted to ergonomic products. Krishna, congratulations on a job well done!

This special issue also includes three other interesting articles that I know you will find informative, too:

- Focal Ulnar Neuropathy in Computer Keyboard Operators
- Shoulder Injury Reduction with Post-Offer Testing
- A Collaborative Effort to Apply Ergonomics to Electric Utility Workers at Generating Stations.

Karen Jacobs