From the editor

This is our second non-theme issue of WORK. As editor, I am enjoying the challenge of selecting among those accepted manuscripts, ones whose topics do not quite fit into our upcoming themes. As you read through the table of contents, you will see that this issue contains a variety of topics written by authors internationally and from various professions. Some topics are: cross-translation of the job descriptive index; an investigation into vocational rehabilitation practices by brain injury services in the United Kingdom; and work-related musculoskeletal symptoms among construction workers in the pipe trades. I think you will find each of the articles contained in this issue to be very interesting!

I would like to thank Carl Bettencourt, OTR/I who has completed his tenure as book review editor of WORK. I have enjoyed working with Carl over the last six years and wish him the best. I am pleased to welcome Jerrie Perron, MS, OTR/L, FAOTA as our new book review editor. Jerrie brings to this role many years of experience as a master occupational therapy clinician and administrator.

We continue to strive to meet the needs of our readers by providing comprehensive and innovative articles related to work. As always, I welcome your feedback and suggestions for future topics.
